Panelized wood roof systems are a great solution for Commercial buildings, however designing this type of roof system using traditional component software can be a challenge. In this presentation we'll see how RISAFloor and RISA-3D can be used together to optimize a roof system for both gravity and lateral loads. We'll see the benefits of modeling an entire building in wood, and how RISA software can assist by automatically generating lateral forces, distributing them, and designing members to the latest code requirements. We'll also explore how RISA software can be used for all types of multi-material designs, combining different materials in one model for a more realistic design approach. With this powerful tool, you can model dimensional lumber, Glulam, and engineered products along with steel or masonry to create a solution for every type of building.

10:15-11:15 am Hybrid Roof Specifications Discussion

Peter "Hoppy" Post, CEO, Panelized Structures, Inc., Darrell Marchell, Vice President of Engineering, Panelized Structures, Inc.

The specifications were distributed at the 2008 Fall Meeting and attendees were asked to review them and send comments back to Hoppy. The specifications have now been updated and this session will provide SREA members an opportunity to review and provide any additional comments prior to distribution.
